A photographic response to the pandemic.

Each of us built a set of the room we spent most of our lockdown time in. The objects and furniture which served as our predominant landscape became so hauntingly familiar. We constructed these miniatures from memory rather than our usual fastidious studying and measuring, limiting ourselves to materials we already had.

Each of these spaces is also the place from which we looked out into the rest of the world. As an artistic duo with an animation practice and a shared studio we are used to spending large amounts of time in the same room. These two spaces were all we saw of each other's lives for most of the year.
